

Democrats are playing with fire on Russia

BY NORMAN SOLOMON, CONTRIBUTOR - 01/09/17 11:01 AM EST

1,639 SHARES

SHARE (1.7K)

TWEET

PLU

Just In...

Trump's travel ban to go into effect Thursday

NATIONAL SECURITY
— 49M 48S AGO

Tea Party favorite to lead conservative think tank

HOUSE — 1H 9M AGO

Trump quietly puts teeth into his 'extreme vetting' policy

ADMINISTRATION — 1H 9M AGO

Medicaid becomes big threat to GOP's healthcare revival

HEALTHCARE — 1H 9M AGO

Unresolved issues, very little time for Senate GOP

SENATE — 1H 9M AGO

GOP touts FBI look into Sanders's wife

CAMPAIGN — 1H 9M AGO

Sports betting advocates see momentum building

BUSINESS & LOBBYING
— 1H 9M AGO

Coal, nuclear vie for supremacy in key Energy Department study

ENERGY & ENVIRONMENT
— 1H 9M AGO

VIEW ALL

© Getty Images

Two months after the defeat of Hillary Clinton, the most cohesive message from congressional Democrats is: blame Russia. The party leaders have doubled down on an approach that got nowhere during the presidential campaign — trying to tie the Kremlin around Donald Trump's neck.

Still more interested in playing to the press gallery than speaking directly to the economic distress of voters in the Rust Belt and elsewhere who handed the presidency to Trump, top Democrats would much rather scapegoat Vladimir Putin than scrutinize how they've lost touch with working-class voters.

Meanwhile, the emerging incendiary rhetoric against Russia is extremely dangerous. It could lead to a military confrontation between two countries that each have thousands of nuclear weapons.

At the Senate Armed Services Committee hearing last Thursday on foreign cyber threats, ranking member Jack Reed (D-RI) denounced "Russia's rejection of the post-Cold War international order and aggressive actions against its neighbors," and he condemned "a regime with values and interests so antithetical to our own." It was the kind of oratory that would have made John Foster Dulles or Barry Goldwater proud.

Like so many other senators on the committee, Reed seemed eager for a new Cold War while accusing the foe of digital aggression. "In addition to new Cold war while accusing the foe of digital aggression. In addition to stealing information from the Democratic National Committee and the Clinton campaign," he said, "and cherry-picking what information it leaked to the media, the Russian government also created and spread fake news and conspiracies across the vast social media landscape."

The Russian government may have hacked the DNC and Clinton campaign emails, and it may have given those emails to WikiLeaks. But that's hardly a slam dunk.

Over the weekend, after Friday's release of a much-ballyhooed report from the office of Director of National Intelligence James Clapper, the report underwent a cogent critique by former Associated Press and Newsweek reporter Robert Parry. Stripping the 25-page DNI report down to its essence, Parry pointed out that it "contained no direct evidence that Russia delivered hacked emails from the Democratic National Committee and Hillary Clinton's campaign chairman John Podesta to WikiLeaks."

Parry added: "The DNI report amounted to a compendium of reasons to suspect that Russia was the source of the information — built largely on the argument that Russia had a motive for doing so because of its disdain for Democratic nominee Clinton and the potential for friendlier relations with Republican nominee Trump. But the case, as presented, is one-sided and lacks any actual proof."

While stenographic accounts of official claims have dominated coverage of the January 6 report, major flaws are coming to light in mainstream media. For instance, a piece that appeared on Saturday in the New York Times, by Scott Shane, reported in its ninth paragraph: "What is missing from the public report is what many Americans most eagerly anticipated: hard evidence to back up the agencies' claims that the Russian government engineered the election attack."

The article reported: "Under the circumstances, many in Washington expected the agencies to make a strong public case to erase any uncertainty. Instead, the message from the agencies essentially amounts to 'trust us.' There is no discussion of the forensics used to recognize the handiwork of known hacking groups, no mention of intercepted communications between the Kremlin and the hackers, no hint of spies reporting from inside Moscow's propaganda machinery."

But Democratic lawmakers aren't interested in doubts or caveats. They believe the Russian hacking issue is a political winner. Whether or not that's true, it's certainly a convenient way to evade the sobering lessons that should have been learned from the last election about the Democratic Party's lack of authenticity in its claims to be fighting for the interests of working people.

At the same time, enthusiasm for banging the drum against Putin is fast becoming a big part of the Democratic Party's public identity in 2017. And — insidiously — that's apt to give the party a long-term political stake in further demonizing the Russian government.

The reality is grim, and potentially catastrophic beyond comprehension. By pushing to further polarize with the Kremlin, congressional Democrats are increasing the chances of a military confrontation with Russia. By teaming up with the likes of Republican senators John McCain and Lindsey Graham to exert bipartisan pressure for escalation, Democrats could help stampede the Trump administration in reckless directions.

Related News by

Scarborough: Obama controlling Trump with...

Dem rep mocks Trump with his own fake Time...

Former 'Daily Show' comedian slams CNN...

Colbert: Russian agents 'followed me...

This approach is already underway. It is worse than irresponsible. It is madness that could lead to a nuclear holocaust.

Norman Solomon is co-founder of the online activist group RootsAction.org, which has 750,000 members. He is executive director of the Institute for Public Accuracy.

---

The views of Contributors are their own and are not the views of The Hill

TAGS WASHINGTON D.C. MOSCOW UNITED STATES RUSSIA 2016 PRESIDENTIAL TRANSITION
RUSSIAN HACKING SCANDAL REPUBLICAN PARTY DEMOCRATIC PARTY HILLARY CLINTON
LINDSEY GRAHAM DONALD TRUMP JOHN MCCAIN JACK REED

SHARE (1.7K)

TWEET

PLUS ONE

THE HILL 1625 K STREET, NW SUITE 900 WASHINGTON DC 20006 | 202-628-8500 TEL | 202-628-8503 FAX
THE CONTENTS OF THIS SITE ARE ©2017 CAPITOL HILL PUBLISHING CORP., A SUBSIDIARY OF NEWS COMMUNICATIONS, INC.